Vesta, the largest, is only kilometres miles in diameter, which is tiny even when compared with the Solar System's smallest planet, Mercury which is 4, km 3, miles. Families and Homeschools

But they needed to call it something, so they decided to call it a dwarf planet. It was discovered in by English astronomer, William Herschel. Although there are currently five dwarf planets there are lots of other objects which are likely to fall into the same category. Although quite harmless to Earth they can be dangerous to satellites and spacecraft in space as they can cause numerous very small impacts called micrometeorites. Neptune is thought to be the windiest planet in the Solar System. Sure, that day may never come in our lifetimes—but everyone should have a copy of this lying around just in case.
