The great and comprehensive posthumous edition of Lightfoot's "Clement of Rome" which contains a photographic facsimile of the Constantinople Clement of Rome. He wrote it in the name of the Church of Rome to the Church of Corinth, when a sedition had arisen in the latter Church. Love admits of no schisms: love gives rise to no seditions: love does all things in harmony.

The church at Rome is called "ancient"; and the emissaries from Rome are said to Chapter 55 then gives examples of this kind of love, which he pulls from both secular sources and the Scriptures. Clement is known for his epistle to the church in Corinth c.

John indeed was still alive, and Corinth was rather nearer to Ephesus than to Rome by: Evaristus. While 2 Clement has been traditionally ascribed to Clement of Rome Clement, most scholars believe that 2 Clement was written in the 2nd century based on the doctrinal themes of the text and a near match between words in 2 Clement and in the Greek Gospel of the Egyptians.
